Mountain Street Cemetery

This old graveyard, owned by the Town of Williamsburg and currently overseen and cared for by the town's Trust Fund and Cemetery Commissioners, is thought to have been in use since about 1790, roughly 30 years after the first European settlers took up residence within Williamsburg's present boundaries. One of the people named on a stone here is William Warren, who died in 1768 and has by far the best claim of being Williamsburg's first settler. There is no way of knowing whether he is actually buried here, or if he is, whether this was his original burial place or his remains were reinterred here years after his death. There is no doubt that a number of his descendants are buried here. Because one of the town's first official acts in 1771 was the creation of a burying ground in the village of Williamsburg, and in the mid-19th century another was established in the center of Haydenville, the burials here have tended to be of people who lived very near this cemetery — nearer than they were to the other burial places. Thus we find many Warners, Kingsleys, Waits and Adamses named on the stones. All these families had farms along Mountain Street and what we now call Adams Road.

The cemetery is located about 1.6 miles from Route 9 along High Street and Mountain Street, behind #67 Mountain Street and about 250 feet west of the road. It adjoins a large hayfield. Beside the cemetery's sign at the roadside there is a narrow grassed lane that leads straight from the road to the NE corner of the cemetery, where there are two gates in the sturdy iron fence that bounds it on three sides. The fourth (west) side of the cemetery is bounded by a wire stock fence belonging to the abutting landowner. The cemetery's overall dimensions are about 140' x 160'.

The currently surviving stones name about 155 decedents who are thought to be buried here. The number is approximate, because some family monuments contain the names of family members who may not be buried in this cemetery. It is very likely that more, perhaps many more, stones once stood in the cemetery and that there are now many unmarked graves. As the map suggests, the cemetery now presents the appearance of being very lightly populated, but that may be deceptive.

The author's numbering scheme includes a handful of footstones, but does not assign numbers to most existing footstones because in most cases it's clear that that's what they are, and they provide no information that isn't on the headstones. There are a few notes in the inscriptions section of this booklet that refer to and explain the positions of certain footstones. The map shows, near headstone #105, a pile of footstones that have been collected from around the graveyard and deposited in a heap by persons unknown. No attempt has been made by the author to move or identify them.

The author is a historian and genealogist, not a scholar or even a knowledgeable amateur in the study of gravestone design, symbolism, materials or craftsmanship. Questions about the stonemasons and their practices should be addressed to someone more expert. The Association for Gravestone Studies in Greenfield, Massachusetts is the place to start looking for such a person. For questions about the people named on the stones and their roles in the history of Williamsburg, feel free to contact the author.
