Lillian Eldelmann of Dalton receives a commendation from Gov. Judd Gregg, Wednesday at Loon Mountain in Lincoln, for her work with "The Library Comes to You" project. She drives a mediamobile that travels the North Country to deliver books and tapes to people who can't get to a library. In addition, she has also devoted time to the boards of the White Mountains Regional School, and the Dalton and Twin Mountain public libraries. Executive Councilor Ray Burton of Bath reads the wording on the commendation.

10 North Country Citizens Honored

LINCOLN, N.H. — Ten North Country citizens were commended Wednesday at the meeting between

Gov. Judd Gregg and the executive council at Loon Mountain. The 10 were saluted for their outstanding contributions to their North Country communities.

Five of the honorees are associated with library service in northern New Hampshire and the remaining individuals range from a developer to

National delegates

The North Country will be well represented at the White House Conference on Library and Information Services with two delegates and two alternates. The conference, July 9-13, allows citizen participation in the development of policy for libraries and information services. Representing New Hampshire will be, front: Cil Vickery, and seeing eye dog Erica, alternate representing the general public; back, left to right: Lillian Edelmann, delegate representing elected officials (she is the Dalton librarian and a member of the White Mountain Regional school board); Ned Densmore, alternate representing elected officials (he was selected while still a member of the General Court); and Kathryn Taylor, delegate representing the professional librarians. New Hampshire has four delegates.
