CEMETERY

The Adams Cemetery as we know it today, was originally called the Burying Yard, when the bounds of the cemetery were set off from the "overplus land" around 1740. It was call the "Old Yard" and also the "Center Cemetery".

The old section covers the area from the east road, west to the fence and from Tinkham Road, north to the line of stones on the line with the old cemetery vault house. Within this area there are 995 headstones and footstones. The stones listed in the subsequent pages are from this section.

As time passed, it became known as the Adams Cemetery, since Deacon Adams property adjoined the Burying Yard. In 1876, the original section was enlarged by the addition of the east side of land and again in 1896 by the larger addition to the north. A hearse house, where the town hearse was kept, was located on the southeast corner of the original section for many years.

The oldest stone in this section is that of Elizabeth Cockril who died April 26, 1741, age 39 and the most recent is Mary L. Hitchcock, who died November 16, 1955, age 89.

The material of the stones is the dark red sandstone found here in Wilbraham. The light colored stones is a white sandstone containing some marble. There are a few stones of slate.

The project to record the burials was started in 1964 by Arthur D. Fiske. Then around 1980, the Wilbraham Historical Commission undertook this task by listing the name on each stone on index cards. In 1987 this project was completed by listing each name in alphabetical order and also the names by row number reading from the east road to the west fence. Included is a site plan of this section showing all the numbered stones.
